Facts about Worms

- Worm Resistance is a problem on a global level and is more likely when wormers are used frequently.
- 80% of horses naturally have a very low worm burden, so it is unnecessary to worm most horses regularly.
- Regularly worming your horse does not always prevent a high worm burden.
- Resistance to wormers can be a problem; by only worming horses with a high worm egg count, it reduces the number of potentially resistant eggs being shed onto pasture by horses which have been treated.
- Good management is also important in making worm control effective:
 - Frequent poo picking
 - Co-grazing with cattle or sheep
 - Smaller grazing groups if possible
 - Dose horses correctly when they need worming
